-- David Langer, Visioneering News Service

Cathedral City, CA -- Some renowned titles in spiritual and metaphysical literature have become classics, and they continue to awaken and inspire legions of new readers generation after generation. In recent years, this tradition has been carried on by the Course in Miracles, Carlos Castaneda’s accounts of Don Juan, Dan Millman’s Way of the Peaceful Warrior, and James Redfield’s The Celestine Prophecy.

The first great teaching novel of the new millennium, Going Deeper: How to Make Sense of Your Life When Your Life Makes No Sense by Jean-Claude Koven (Prism House Press, 2004, ISBN: 0-9723954-5-8, 432 pages, $24.95) is having a major impact on the metaphysical world. Koven’s book is destined for greatness: it’s well written, tells a compelling story, employs fascinating and unique characters, is timely and timeless, and brims with wisdom of the highest order. This book will take the reader on a fascinating journey through the meat of the world’s great philosophies, bridging the East and the West into a synthesis that transcends quantum realities.

Going Deeper tells the story of Larry Randers, a successful Los Angeles attorney, who finds his life falling apart after a painful divorce. Everything he has achieved and all the possessions he’s acquired now seem meaningless as if he’s been collecting tarnished brass rings on somebody else’s carousel. Shattered by the momentous reality-shattering events of September 11, 2001, Larry heads into the desert to spend some time with his beloved dog, Zeus.

There, he experiences a roller-coaster ride of extraordinary initiations, triggered by his encounter with a talking tree, ephemeral Native American teachers, a talking raccoon, and other embodied and disembodied entities. Larry’s view of reality is turned inside out. He discovers how small is old world really was and the vastness that lies before him if he can only muster the courage to explore it. His journey is our journey, and as he grows out of complacency and ignorance, so do we. As he travels beyond space and time, so do we. As he becomes permanently altered and realizes who he really is and what his purpose on Earth is, so do we.
